Nanowrimo Self-Evaluation

November has come and gone. Hopefully the experience of writing a novel in a month has been rewarding. This is your chance to go back and reflect on the experience and on your completed work. Some of it will be used as part of your grade for this assignment. Some of it is simply to help you reflect on what you've accomplished. It might also become useful when and if you revisit this novel and decide to pursue it further.

Answer each entry honestly and completely. The more detail you provide, the more it will help develop your writing. As such, part of your score for your self-evaluation is dependent on the thoroughness of your answers.

1. On a scale of one to five (one being poor and five being outstanding), how much effort did you exert on this assignment? Justify your scale score.

2. Are you happy with the way your main character turned out? Explain. If you could go back and change something about the character and/or how you portrayed him or her, what would you change? How and why?

3. Detail: Are you happy with the amount of detail and description (especially in regard to setting and sensory details) that you were able to include? Why or why not?

If you could go back, what are some details that you'd want to make sure you'd include/improve?
Explain using specific examples.
